Founded in 1926, OACRAO is a nonprofit, voluntary professional education association of institutions of higher education in the State of Ohio.

MEMBERSHIP

Institutional Memberships are offered to accredited, collegiate-level, degree-granting institutions of higher education in Ohio, and to other institutions of higher education as approved by the Board of Directors.

- A minimum of ten years active participation as an OACRAO member.
- A minimum of ten years service within an OACRAO member institution.
- Outstanding contributions to the profession and OACRAO.

Honorary Members are entitled to all benefits that accrue to members, including voting rights and placement on the OACRAO permanent mailing list.

Corporate Memberships are normally extended to an organization or company that is not eligible for membership as an institution for an annual corporate fee of $100.00. Benefits provided to the corporate member include:

- Access to membership information.
- Copies of the Association's newsletter.
- Consultation with VP of Programs as a corporate liaison regarding issues and topics.

BENEFITS

OACRAO supports your professional development by:

- Sponsoring an annual meeting every fall in which members share their expertise with others in the profession and meet to discuss relevant issues and concerns affecting their professions.
- Sponsoring workshops to improve the skills of individuals with responsibilities relative to records management, admissions, enrollment management, administrative information technology and student services. Special workshops for support staff are also provided from time to time.
- Providing opportunities for involvement and interaction in OACRAO's professional activities committees, such as: Admissions and International Education, Data Management and Research, Professional Development, and Records and Registration (see Committee Participation Form in the back of this handbook).
- Maintaining an association website at www.ohioaacrao.org. The website provides access to association information such as: the membership directory, the OACRAO Newsletter, the association's constitution and bylaws, meeting minutes and a wealth of other information of interest to the membership. This website also provides links to other State and Regional Association websites and to the AACRAO website.
- Maintaining an association listserv to provide better communication to our membership. Not only is this listserv used to communicate association business, but it can also be utilized to solicit information and feedback from your colleagues across the state or as a venue to discuss relevant issues and concerns affecting our profession. OACRAO-L is also often used as a place to advertise relevant job opportunities at member institution. Go to the website above to get information on how to join the listserv and the guidelines for use.
- Maintaining an association directory that provides a listing of membership institutions and specific contacts at that institution. The association directory also includes a listing of our corporate and honorary members, a listing of past presidents, and the OACRAO Bylaws.
- Providing special recognition and awards for distinguished service to the association and the profession.

GETTING INVOLVED

Annual Conference

Each Autumn, OACRAO hosts a statewide 3 day conference. This is an opportunity for institutions to share information and for individual members to learn about best practices, new business partner opportunities, and networking.

Workshops

OACRAO sponsors workshops throughout the year. This has traditionally included a summer workshop for support staff, residency workshops, and other workshops on specific subject relevant to the registrar and admissions fields.

Voting Membership

Each member institution has an opportunity to designate one or more institutional representatives and voting members based on enrollment. For an additional fee, institutions may add non-voting members. Institutional representatives and voting members have voting rights at meetings.

Committee Membership

All voting members are eligible for appointment to one of the various operating and program committees. Committee memberships are for three years unless otherwise noted. To volunteer to serve on a committee, complete the form at the end of the new member handbook or volunteer at the annual conference.

Presentations

The annual conference and workshops are made possible through the presentations of you and your colleagues. If you have a subject you would like to hear more about or have an area where you are able to share information, contact the Vice President of Programs.

Listserv

OACRAO operates an email mailing list that provides an opportunity for members and institutions to share information throughout the year or to pose questions on specific subjects in order to benchmark processes and policies. To be added to the listserv, contact schneider.260@osu.edu.

Mentoring

The membership and mentoring committee can connect members who are new to the profession with experts in specific areas or those with general experience in the admissions and registrar fields.

A History of the Registrar Profession

Adopted from remarks by J. Douglas Conner, former Executive Director of AACRAO

Some historians have traced the origin of the registrar profession to the Middle Ages -- approximately the 14th century. During this period, the structure of early universities was greatly influenced by the organizational pattern established at the University of Paris. Under this pattern, the individual responsible for governing the university was designated as the "Rector". This position evolved from the office of the "Proctor" who supervised the students from individual nations at the university. Later, when an administrator for corporate powers was needed, the position of Rector was instituted. Both the Proctor and the Rector were elected administrators. As the university grew in importance, a Secretary was elected who functioned as a "Vice-Rector."

The office which probably preceded the registrar was that of "Major Beadle." The Major Beadle performed many functions including informing faculty members of meetings, helping faculty members with discipline, ringing bells for chapel, walking at the head of academic processions, and keeping a register of all graduates. Also, the Major Beadle's salary was paid from fees imposed upon prospective graduates, licentiates, and masters of the university. If the Major Beadle disclosed confidential university matters, his salary was not paid. Before he could assume the position, the Major Beadle was required to swear allegiance to the nation, the faculty, and to the Rector of the university. Later, Major Beadles were given the additional title of "Grapharins" which may be translated to mean clerk or registrar. These Major Beadles were assigned the responsibility for keeping the official graduation register and the matriculation list of the university.

In America, colleges were established in the 17th century and were modeled, for the most part, on the British universities. These colleges included the College of William and Mary, Harvard College, Kings College and Yale College. At these colleges the registrar was often a faculty member who assumed the responsibility for college entrance requirements and admissions procedures.

Throughout the 19th century, as the importance of college education was emphasized, admission requirements tended to become very specific and quantitative. As a result of the emphasis placed upon college admissions standards, the need for the Office of the Registrar became apparent.

The registrar profession, as it is known today, is attributed to the efforts of Ezra Gillis, who is considered to be, by many individuals, the father of the registrar profession. One of Gillis' major accomplishments was the establishment of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO).

A History of the Admissions Profession

Adapted from the book:

Admissions, Academic Records, and Registrar Services
by C. James Quann and Associates

Some private institutions had what they called field representatives and admission counselors prior to WWI, Columbia University opened an Office of Admissions in 1915. However, separate admission offices were developed in later years. Perry (1970) reported that admissions developed as a specialization in institutions after WWII. The G.I. Bill of Rights of 1946 made the admissions office and staff a necessity. Junior and community colleges were developed largely as open door admission, while most colleges and universities were moving to selective admission, therefore requiring additional staff for screening applications. Two events dealing with professional organizations marked the emergence of admissions as a specialized field: The Association of College Admissions Counselors (1937) (now the National Association of College Admission Counselors) and the American Association of Collegiate Registrars (1910) added “and Admission Officers” to the title in 1949. By 1952 when Harvard University established its Office of the Dean of Admissions, admissions had become a separate office of its own, involving recruitment, interviewing, testing, counseling, evaluation and placement, orientation, research, and publications. At some institutions, the Registrar oversaw admissions and at others the Director of Admissions oversaw the Registrar’s office. The first consolidated administration under one dean occurred in 1870 at Harvard University.

The American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO) is a nonprofit, voluntary, higher education association that had its beginning with a meeting of 15 registrars in Detroit in August 1910. Today there are more than 9,000 individual members representing approximately 2,300 institutions in more than 35 countries.

The association maintains a Washington, D.C. office with a professional staff under the direction of an executive secretary. In addition to the support of the normal on-going program of the association, this office maintains liaison with a large number of other associations, works with governmental agencies, and reviews legislation and regulations that impact on the areas of admissions and records.

The association's program is largely carried out by committees, boards, councils, and task forces. Major efforts go into the annual conference and into a large number of outstanding publications. The conference is the highlight of the year and offers well over a hundred individual program sessions covering all facets of the profession for all levels of experience. Attendance has averaged over 2,500 for the past decade.

The mission of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO) is to provide professional development, guidelines and voluntary standards to be used by higher education officials regarding the best practices in records management, admissions, enrollment management, administrative information technology and student services. It also provides a forum for discussion regarding policy initiation and development, interpretation and implementation at the institutional level and in the global educational community.
